

Florida Department of Juvenile Justice

Proprietary Software Policy

Title 17 United States Code, section 101 et seq., the Federal Copyright Act, protects the interests of persons who have developed original works of authorship, including computer software. Commercial software developers have for many years relied upon copyrights to protect their interests in these valuable creative works. Violations of copyright act, such as unauthorized copying of software, can result in substantial and criminal penalties.

The Department of Juvenile Justice recognizes and supports the legitimate interests of copyright holders, and prohibits its employees from violating the rights of copyright holders. License agreements for commercial software often provide only a right to use the software; these agreements do not transfer ownership of the software to the user. In most cases, license agreements for software prohibit copying the software, except for archival purposes. Some license agreements also prohibit use of the software on any machine other than the one for which the license was obtained.

All users of commercial software products licensed to the department are responsible for upholding the terms of the license agreement. Unless the license clearly provides the right to copy the software or to use it on another machine, employees must assume that it is illegal to do so. Before copying software, or installing software on a computer other than the one it was originally licensed for, all employees must ensure that the terms of the software license permit the copying or installation. If you are not sure as to the specifics of a certain license, please contact the Bureau of Information Technology (IT) representative assigned to your area.

Acknowledgement Form

I have read and understand the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice's policies on unauthorized copying of proprietary software. I understand that unauthorized copying is a violation of federal law, and that I may be subject to civil and criminal penalties for unauthorized copying. By signing this form, I agree to abide by these policies.
